Nalanda-Sriwijaya Centre Archaeological Field School

Applicants Sought

Applications are being sought from students interested in pursuing a three-week intensive program of study in Singapore and Cambodia. The Field School will include lectures, archaeological laboratory analysis, as well as visits to archaeological sites and museums. Lodging and travel subsidies will be provided. Applicants for the program should be enrolled in a postgraduate program or be in their final year of undergraduate study. Preferred fields of specialization include archaeology, history, and art history. They should be citizens of East Asia Summit (EAS) countries. The 18 East Asia Summit countries are: Australia, Brunei, Cambodia, China, India, Indonesia, Japan, Laos, Malaysia, Myanmar, New Zealand, Philippines, Russia, Singapore, South Korea, Thailand, United States, and Vietnam.

About the Nalanda-Sriwijaya Centre Archaeological Field School

The first field school began in 2012 with support from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs (Singapore) as a way to contribute to an increased understanding of the ancient and intimate links that have connected Asian countries, and to emphasize the history of intra-Asian interactions over the past 2,000 years. The Centre is part of the Institute of Southeast Asian Studies (ISEAS), Singapore.

For the 2013 session, participants will have a chance to participate in the excavation of the Cheung Ek site, near the capital city of Phnom Penh, Cambodia. The area has thus far revealed an initial settlement date around 300B.C., along with a large concentration of 5th-7th century kilns, and a 10th c. circular earthwork. The field school will be led by Dr. John Miksic, Head of the Archaeology Unit at the Institute of Southeast Asian Studies, and leading researcher of Southeast Asian Archaeology, with a specialization in Southeast Asian ceramics, and Phon Kaseka of the Royal Academy of Cambodia, the lead researcher for the Cheung Ek site.
